

Too busy, or too lazy? What we're really trying to say...

Hallo Freunde,

as you know, this is a monthly newsletter. Now why is this the first newsletter since August then, you are asking?

Well, times have been busy, I respond.

Which is British English for: I've been too lazy to do it.

As a foreigner I'm still fascinated by the differences between American and British English. In America, for example, people say: "I live in an extremely dangerous neighborhood".

Whilst the same sentence in Britain would be: "This neighbourhood is up-and-coming."

I hope my career is also up-and-coming. Which translates into: one day I'll be successful enough to move into a neighbourhood that has no knife crime.

Here's what has been happening:

I headlined an exciting tour through the Balkans in late November, performing in many up-and-coming cities.

A few days ago German TV channel Sat.1 filmed season 2 of "Jetzt wird's schräg", the German version of "The Slide Show". I will be on 2 episodes which will be broadcast in February. Great fun!

("Great fun" translates into "I got the attention and exposure I hoped for")

Because it's December I've also done quite a few Christmas gigs already, including the annual Christmas specials at Maastricht university and in Brussels. Both sold out and lots of fun! You missed them.

And here's what's coming up:

Apart from several club gigs (in Germany and London) and corporate Christmas gigs, December is holding a few more special surprises:

A big Christmas special in a huge theatre in Antwerp. With Sean Hughes, Isak Jansson, Maureen Younger, me and legendary Nigel Williams.

December is also strange. I "won" a Christmas tree in a raffle the other day. It's December 10th and I already have a Christmas tree.

Which translates into: By Christmas Eve I will have a pile of needles and a stick.

Merry Christmas!

I hope to see you at a gig.

As usual you find my live dates here: www.germancomedian.com/tour.html

See you around.

Danke und Prost!

Christian Ze German